"The History"

www.mceneryco.com

Grace Parish was founded in 1886 by Episcopalians in downtown New Orleans after Christ Church, the 200 year-old mother church of Episcopalians in Louisiana and the oldest non-Roman Catholic Church in New Orleans, moved from Canal Street to an uptown location. Grace Parish had two earlier church buildings on South Rampart Street and at 1501 Canal Street, respectively.

In the early 1950s, Grace Parish was outgrowing its 1501 Canal Street facility and leased the property to the Texaco Company. The old church building was demolished and the Texaco Building, individually listed on the national register, was constructed. The congregation worshipped in a temporary location while the new church was being constructed. In 1951 August Perez and Associates and Lucien Haase were selected as the architects for the project. August Perez had an extensive career in New Orleans and was responsible for many projects including the Shell Building also individually listed on the National Register. By the beginning of 1953, the plans for the church were completed and a contract for construction, estimated at $342,950, was awarded to D.D. Pittman Company. Construction was scheduled for two hundred and ten working days for the main building and an additional one hundred days to complete the rectory. The plans called for a church with a five hundred person seating capacity, an adjoining chapel, rectory and bell tower. The church was completed in 1954 and was immediately recognized for its striking, contemporary design.
